Nxesi's Nkandla report welcome

THE report by Public Works Minister Thulas Nxesi on security upgrades at President Zuma's home is welcome and helps clear the air as far the issue is concerned.

Finally the people will not have to rely on exaggerated allegations by the media on the subject, while the opposition has finally been exposed as riding on inflated stories about Zuma.

The minister is correct when he says that the report will not be made public since this is a security issue for the country's president.

It would be naïve of the opposition to keep wasting time on an issue that should logically not be made public.

Even in our private homes we never publicise what type of security measures we have put up for the simple reason that it would consequently jeopardise our security.

The DA's Lindiwe Mazibuko, for example, can never publicise the gadgets she has put up at her home for her protection.

She knows that she would not do that but for some sinister reason chooses to aim at exposing the president to security risk.

She is a security risk to the president and thus must be stopped.
