You've missed Nkandla, Jeff

JUSTICE Minister Jeff Radebe's comments in "War on corruption", yesterday, refer. How do you expect us to consider your statements as nothing more than empty promises when the building of Nkandla continues?

You sacrifice a few minions to divert attention from the big fish. •

What is happening with our tax money at Nkandla is corruption.

The R5-million that you boast is being earmarked for recovery is a pittance compared with the R206-million-plus being spent on our president's compound.

Please do not insult our intelligence.

You must cut off the head of the snake, not tickle its tail. — Dave Harris, Craighall Park

JUSTICE Minister Jeff Radebe will name and shame corrupt officials. Too little too late. At this point, I think reparation should be added.

Taxpayers deserve to see all the money that has been stolen, or wasted, back in government coffers, and spent as was intended.

We could begin by paying hospital suppliers and educating willing teachers, who would teach in equipped state schools. Nkandla could be used as a kibbutz, which would teach people how to feed and clothe themselves.

Chancellor House has enough to elevate South Africa to a position of importance in the world.

Let's face it: all we need is money and honest people who have the integrity to use it for the good of South Africa.

We do have both, but we are presently at the mercy of the ANC government. — Adele, by e-mail
