
Impound fine dodgers' cars

THE Provincial Transport and Public Works spokesperson told us fines for traffic offences totalling more than R416 000 had been issued.

Good work! But what we really want to know is, how many of these fines ever get paid?

It is all well and good issuing traffic fines, but if they are not paid and not followed up by the authorities, what is the point?

The authorities need to get more hard-nosed and seize the vehicles until fines are paid, crush them if necessary, but to allow offenders to simply laugh makes a mockery of the time and effort spent in catching these offenders.

Tell us the truth, the whole truth, not just the bits that make the department look good.

Your reporters need to dig more deeply!

DOUGLAS HENDRY

Riebeek West