'Redeploy' funds to finance land reform

I REFER to the government's plan to expropriate land without paying compensation.

It appears that the pace of land reform is being adversely affected by a shortage of funds.

Consequently I would like to suggest using some of the money that Zuma wants to spend on the nuclear power stations that Pravin Gordhan believes we don't need (apparently these power-stations are going to cost around R1.56 trillion and are particularly attractive to Zuma due to the fact that his son and a few of his cronies recently bought a uranium mine, etc).

Why not sell the forgotten submarines?

Alternatively, we could sell a few of the submarines Julius Malema and his EFF colleagues appear to have forgotten about.
