

Reshuffles, red berets and lost elections!

Thulas Nxesi.

■ FORMER Minister of Sports Thulas Nxesi most probably punched the air after news that he was shuffled from Sports to Public works. See, sports somehow put Nxesi under pressure to look like he was working out and exercising. He even bought a tracksuit and running shoes, but his overflowing belly-boep seemed like a permanent feature. Hopefully, Thoko Xasa will energise the Sports Ministry.

■ CHIEF Mwelo Nonkonyana is not giving up the fight and wants to challenge Danny Jordaan for the most powerful job in Mzansi football. Nonkonyana this week interdicted Sifa from continuing with the presidential elections on 24 March. He was deemed illegible to contest the elections because he was expelled as a Sifa member. An advocate by profession, Nonkonyana is not known for winning many cases and let's see what tricks he's got up his sleeve.

now be all about "It's how you get there..." Maybe,

■ RECENTLY, it was "Go Well, Go Kjell" after Orlando Pirates fired their Swedish coach Kjell Jonevret. This week, Bucs teamed up with petroleum giants Caltex and it will Caltex will inject some vooma and fuel the Buccaneers ship that's been running low on petrol in recent seasons.

■ PSL bosses visited the EFF offices this past week. The league's board of governors, that included the likes of David Thidiela, and Stan Matthews and were led by Colonel Irvin Khoza himself. There wasn't much detail about the meeting and it was said that it was just a meeting to introduce the PSL to Julius Malema and his fiery fighters. Maybe, the EFF are contemplating registering a team in the league that will turn out in the now famous all red colours and berets.

■ BENNI MCCARTHY's passion for the game is getting the better of him. Against Baroka FC midweek, McCarthy fell to the ground after his charges missed an easy scoring chance. In the process, the former FC Porto striker exposed his buttocks and it wasn't pleasant to see his arse cleavage on live television.
