Port Shepstone Hospital has welcomed its new human resources manager, Mxolisi Zulu who started his tenure at the facility in January this year.

Mr Zulu has a long and impressive track record in government. He joined the National Department of Public Works as a student in human resources management in 2006 and worked his way through the ranks until he was promoted to personnel practitioner.

After five years, he was offered the position of assistant director, service benefits, at the Western Cape Education Department - becoming the youngest employee in the history of the organisation to be promoted to a junior managerial position so early into his employment.

Mr Zulu (38) says he is looking forward to working at Port Shepstone Regional Hospital and making a positive difference.

Mxolisi Zulu is the new human resources manager at Port Shepstone Regional Hospital.
