

Ramaphosa serious about 'new dawn'

President Cyril Ramaphosa finally announced a new Cabinet that also includes opposition in it, with Patricia de Lille, pictured, being the minister of public works and infrastructure.

This must be welcomed because he has shown that he is indeed serious about the "new dawn" and that things are going to be better than they were with the previous administration.

I also welcome the exclusion of Bathabile Dlamini. She has been a liability in the Cabinet. We can't have people who don't take their jobs seriously.

The inclusion of the younger generation is also a good indication that we do care about the future of this country, as we navigate through the fourth industrial revolution.

It is now time to work with the president in his quest to clean out the rot in our government.

We need to assist him in the fight against corruption in all spheres of government.

The road ahead is very long and it will need all of us to travel with our president and his executive.

We hope, therefore, that all those chosen to serve the people of this country will do so excellently.
