Report on GOOD Party sexcapade claims to be released

TWO senior members of Patricia de Lille's GOOD Party are said to have a case to answer after they were embroiled in an alleged "sex parties" saga during a by-election campaign. This is according to a report by an external investigator appointed by the party.

The report, De Lille said, will only be tabled at the party's highest decision-making body tomorrow. "I haven't seen the report yet," De Lille told Weekend Argus, adding that the party would act with "no fear, no favour" to implement its findings.

Weekend Argus reliably learnt that the investigator found that GOOD's Deputy Mayor of Witzenberg, Felicity Klazen, and Western Cape Member of the Legislature and national campaign organiser Shaun August should face an internal disciplinary process.

Weekend Argus broke the story in June, which caused a heated debate in the National Assembly.

The duo were found to have been in breach of the party's code of conduct, which warranted disciplinary proceedings.

GOOD volunteers, who were part of a by-election campaign, wrote several statements describing how August and Klazen, both married, allegedly spent their time "sexing" and "partying too much" instead of canvassing for votes.

Volunteers also described acts of "gehoerdy" (acts of fornication).

The election campaign was so disastrous that GOOD only received 10% of the votes – a 2% drop from the 2021 municipal elections result in the ward.

The party was so eager to increase their support in the DA-run council that they deployed members to campaign several times a week over nine weeks while booked into the Dennebos/Pine Forest Holiday Resort.

Visitors to the campsite said Klazen and another woman apparently arrived in a blue Toyota Conquest in the middle of the election on a Saturday. Her disabled husband, Chrisjan, allegedly arrived soon after and an argument broke out. "You're messing in my marriage!" Chrisjan apparently shouted and ordered his wife to "come home".

So shocking were the allegations that De Lille flew to Cape Town and summoned members to the Pepperclub Hotel in the CBD halfway through the campaign season to address the matter.

According to invoices seen by Weekend Argus, 30 GOOD Party representatives were housed in eight chalets. One chalet, which accommodates four adults, costs R942 a day.

According to the statements, provided by a whistle-blower, August, Klazen "and their allies" did anything but campaign during that period.

"At one event, Felicity misbehaved by cursing GOOD leaders," one statement read. "She even showed us youngsters her stinking panty."

It was also alleged that Klazen walked naked among the volunteers.

"She was laying naked on the bed in the same room where Uncle Shaun was," read one of the statements.

"My cousin and I sat in the living room where Uncle Shaun repeatedly (sneaked up behind us) so he could go to the room where the deputy was laying without clothes."

In another incident, Klazen apparently skinny-dipped in front of party members.

"It was very unpleasant for us as youth belonging to GOOD to see the deputy mayor of Witzenberg swimming naked," another statement read.

Klazen told Weekend Argus this week she would not comment.

"The GOOD Party is currently conducting an independent investigation and I am cooperating," she said.

August also said he would not comment out of respect of the party's internal processes.

GOOD party leader said the external report will be tabled to leadership on Monday. | File
